Information on Next Week's Program

The National High School Model United Nations (NHSMUN) conference will be held from March 22-25, 2006 in New York City. There are more than 2,600 high school students, faculty and chaperones from across the United States and from throughout the world who attend the conference, which is held at United Nations Headquarters and at the Hilton New York.

For 32 years, NHSMUN has been providing a unique educational opportunity through the simulation of United Nations committees. Students will discuss challenging topics that force them to consider conflicting viewpoints, and they will be expected to work together to develop comprehensive and creative solutions to the very same problems that our world leaders face today. The students are provided detailed background guides for all of the committees, and the simulations are run realistically and accurately. Participation in NHSMUN challenges students to develop life-long problem solving, critical thinking and consensus building skills in a creative and non-traditional setting that contributes to classroom curriculum by bringing global issues to life.
